

The Law Review

The Secret Behind DISCO's Unmatched Ease-of-Use

“Attorneys are able to log in and easily review documents with absolutely no training, just a welcome email with a link. It keeps them focused on practicing law and not reading manuals.”

— Michelle Hannon, Gould & Ratner

“I have used five document review interfaces in my career. DISCO is the best, and it is not even close. The interface is intuitive and makes sense, so little training or troubleshooting is required. Plus, it is just fast.”

--- Jesse Bolling, Greenberg Gross

Engineering + Law

Most software competitors in the legal space today have little domain sophistication, creating a frustrating user experience. At first glance, their features look good. Yet, when you attempt to use the feature, it doesn't work with real-world processes. Too often, ediscovery software is built for service providers or case managers, forgetting about the people who spend their day in the product.

At DISCO, we follow a rigorous workflow to develop our software. By harnessing decades of legal experience across a spectrum of industry experts, DISCO ships features that solve the problems legal professionals actually experience. The magic happens in our weekly meetings called The Law Review.

DISCO combines world-class engineering with a deep love and respect for the law to deliver the best legal technology.

Execution

DISCO's design philosophy is driven by a profound respect for the law. This is demonstrated in weekly Law Review meetings, where design mocks are reviewed by a room of legal professionals. Seasoned attorneys, project managers, litigation support professionals, and technical experts analyze each phase of the development process to assure that every feature works intuitively.

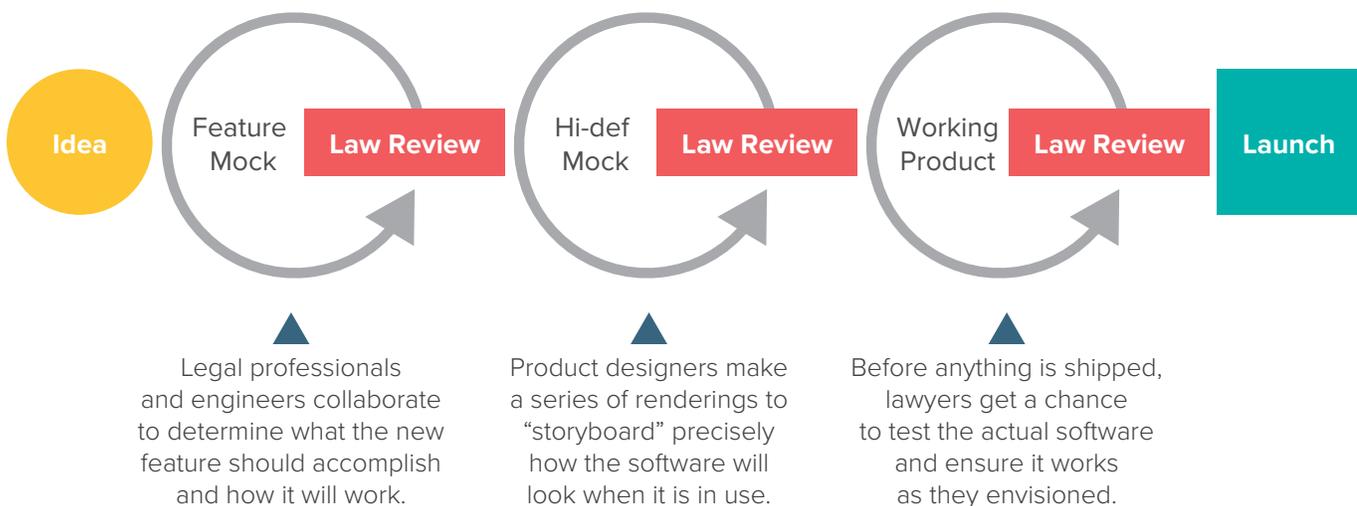

Rigor

When a feature is in development, no less than three iterations of review, from low resolution mocks to a working product, are set before the legal team for scrutiny. When problems or recommendations arise, the team continues to iterate until the a solution is found. The guiding philosophy is this: quality and refinement are not to be compromised in favor of velocity.
